Etasyn becomes part of the PULS group

PULS acquired the German power supply manufacturer Etasyn with retroactive effect as of 1 January 2017. Etasyn is now a 100% subsidiary of the PULS group and will be renamed to PULS Vario GmbH.

By integrating Etasyn, the PULS Power House will be supported by two pillars in the future. In addition to the extensive portfolio of standard DIN rail power supplies, the customer-specific power supplies as well as complete power system solutions form a second important business unit within the PULS group. "Our customers often ask for a combination of standard and customized solutions," Bernhard Erdl - CEO and founder of the PULS group - reports, "due to our new business structure, we can now offer everything from a single source."

Ewald Braith, who joined Etasyn as Managing Director in 2015, will head the new business unit PULS Vario in the future. "I am very glad that he agreed to assume this responsibility," Bernhard Erdl confirms, "considering his comprehensive experience of 30 years in the power business, both in a global corporation and in mid-sized companies, the PULS group looks forward to gaining a really valuable asset in expertise and a top manager!"

Etasyn's most important market segment is medical technology. This segment represented a good half of their turnover in the last business year. The company has further strengths in the fields of customer-specific industrial power supplies and railway technology. This market competence will be expanded in the future. "Our focus for the next years will definitely be on medical technology," Braith states

Due to the integration of Etasyn (75 employees) the number of employees of the PULS group reaches more than 1,000 worldwide.
